A young northern minister, given hard labor for his second integrated huncheon attempt, returned chopping wood and cutting grass today, morally strengthened by his personal attack on the "idol of segregation."

The Rev. Ralph Edwin King, an ordained Methodist minister studying at the Boston University School of Theology, told United Press International in an exclusive interview Wednesday night he was dedicated to civil disobedience "when the law is evil."

Rubbing his sore hands and feeling his two-day growth of beard, King said "when laws are as these in Montgomery, one year-old Negro student recently expelled from Alabama State College here for participating in protest against Southern segregation into the all-white coffee shop of a downtown hotel. The two demanded to be served and refused to leave when ordered to do so by the hotel manager, C. A. Dione.

The two men were fined $100 each on a charge of failing to obey an officer and given a $100 fine and hard labor on a charge of trespassing.

The pair tried to integrate the dining room of the Hotel Dinkler-owned Jefferson Davis Tuesday, less than two hours after they were fined $100 and $45 costs in Montgomery County Circuit Court for participating in an integrated
